Bruce Clark will lead this Sunday

Daylight Savings Ends.

Remember to set your clocks.

Looking forward to our next concert on 6 November at 2:30 at Heyward St UMC, which will be a slight break from our clarinet features of the last two months: our own Bruce Clark calling the tunes from the trombone chair. Bruce lets his trombone do the talking on the bandstand, and his resume speaks for itself. He studied at the University of Tennessee and UofSC, directed bands at White Knoll and other schools, and taught at Columbia College. Along the way he played with a number of bands, including Dizzy Gillespie's band. He retired from teaching and is currently music director of Mt Horeb UMC.

The clarinet for this show will be Ron Hockett from Charlotte. Maybe if we're lucky he will bring his sweet sounding 1920s vintage soprano sax as well.
